FIVE QUESTIONS WITH...

Anne Colton, documentary filmmaker

By Suzanne Flynn
SOUTH SUBURBAN NEWS SERVICE

Q: How has filmmaking changed with the explosive growth of the available delivery systems for information?
   In the 1990s, producing videos was expensive and only my big clients could afford it.
   Now, equipment is less expensive and YouTube has changed everything. It's given us an amazing way to deliver information.
   When I uploaded my first video to YouTube, I had 500 hits within three weeks. To get 500 people to see my film within that time period before YouTube never happened.

Q: What challenges does such immediacy of access now present to filmmakers?
   Getting noticed. The best thing about YouTube is that anyone can make a film and upload it.
   The worst thing is that anyone can make a film and upload it. It's hard to filter through what is good and what is bad.

Q: What does YouTube mean specifically to documentary filmmakers such as yourself?
   You can reach more people than ever before. When most people in my generation think of documentaries, they think of Public Television — boring!
   Now, we can break out of that stigma with access to all different kinds of filmmakers and increased viewership.

Q: What about critics and competition having the ability to see your work so easily?
   Critics make me look at my story differently and give me a different perspective, which I love.

Q: Where will the future take us?
   I think the future will be delivering films to mobile devices, which will open a whole new world.
   Documentaries are not only art, but also messaging. We're addressing getting those messages to mobile devices. With technology anything can happen. We're only limited by our imagination.

H-F seniors to compete in architecture contest

Team creates cutting-edge multipurpose building

By Peter J. Gallanis
SOUTH SUBURBAN NEWS SERVICE

Three H-F High School seniors have formed a team to compete in Chicago Architecture Today’s Mock Firm Competition this spring.

Named “Team Corporate Renaissance,” the team includes project manager Michael Hurley, of Homewood, lead architect Irving Rodriguez, of Glenwood, and lead engineer Max Donkel, of Flossmoor. The team will present its proposal to a select group of judges on May 4.

“We have developed a multipurpose building in downtown Detroit in order to fully encompass the assigned theme of revival and versatility,” Hurley said. “The design is cutting-edge, utilizing a spiral that wraps the complex hourglass structure of the building.”

The students came together to work on the special project in the honors drafting class taught by applied academics teacher Nate Beebe.

“We wanted to take on a challenging real-world project that would give us experience for our future endeavors,” Hurley said. “The architecture program at H-F gave us an awesome opportunity.”

After graduating from H-F in June, the three will be headed in different directions. Hurley plans to attend Grinnell College in Iowa; Donkel will attend Penn State University to major in civil or electrical engineering; and Rodriguez plans to attend Stanford University in California to study engineering or pre-medicine.

Choosing a physician for a child is an important decision, one that will stay with the family for more than 18 years. Within the first year of a child’s life, parents will visit a doctor’s office more than six times for well visits alone, and more if the child gets sick. While it’s easy to feel overwhelmed by the number of choices, with a little research, parents should be able to find a provider they like and, more importantly, trust.

“Parents have to feel comfortable enough to build a relationship with their pediatrician,” said Dr. Mark Roome, a Homewood-based pediatrician. “The pediatrician you choose should be friendly, kind, gentle and obviously like working with kids.”

The pediatrician should also be board certified. This means the physician has graduated college, completed four years of medical school, has at least three years of on-the-job training — called a residency in pediatrics — and has also passed an exam issued by the American Board of Pediatrics.

Dr. Jennifer Shu, pediatrician and medical editor of healthychildren.org, the consumer website of the American Academy of Pediatrics, tells TribLocal if a pediatrician is not board certified, ask why.

“How and maintaining a board certification demonstrates that they have ongoing education and are staying current on the knowledge required to be a pediatrician,” she said.

Some families may choose to see a family practitioner instead of a pediatrician. Practitioners have all the same training and certification as a pediatrician; however, they see patients of all ages and do not limit their practice to children.

How to choose a pediatrician

With a little research H-F parents can find the right doctor

By Suzanne Flynn
SOUTH SUBURBAN NEWS SERVICE

Choosing a physician for a child is an important decision, one that will stay with the family for more than 18 years. Within the first year of a child’s life, parents will visit a doctor’s office more than six times for well visits alone, and more if the child gets sick. While it’s easy to feel overwhelmed by the number of choices, with a little research, parents should be able to find a provider they like and, more importantly, trust.
It’s best to start looking for a pediatrician during the second or third trimester of the pregnancy. “The first thing an expectant mother should do when looking for a pediatrician for their new baby is ask family and friends for referrals,” Shu said. Shu suggests asking people who have a parenting style that’s admired, “because you’ll want to find a pediatrician who is not only well-trained in pediatrics, but also shares your own personal philosophy and style.” In addition to family and friends, obstetricians, schools, day cares and hospitals are also great resources for recommendations.

There are many different types of physicians. If a physician has an “M.D.” after his name that means he attended a traditional medical school. If a physician has a “D.O.” after his name, he is a graduate of an osteopathic medical school. In addition to traditional medical school, he has received an additional 300 to 500 hours in the study of hands-on manual medicine and the body’s musculoskeletal system integrated into his medical curriculum.

Regardless of the initials after a name, Roome explained that a good pediatrician will listen to parents’ concerns, wants and needs, and be willing to work together with parents as a team with the child’s best interest at heart.

“The parents’ and pediatrician’s personalities have to click,” Shu said. “Opinions must be heard and questions answered. And this goes both ways; each side of the relationship has to be respectful towards each other.”

Many pediatricians offer a free meet-and-greet appointment or “interview.” It’s during that interview that the parent learns about the physician’s training, office hours and his personal style and views on child rearing.

If at any point the relationship with the pediatrician is not a good fit, parents should discuss their concerns with the physician and staff. If the concerns are not being dealt with, do not hesitate to find a new doctor.

Senior citizens alerted to false-identity robberies

The Homewood Police Department would like to inform residents of theft scams that are targeting senior citizens in the area. Police report that thieves are using false identities to gain the confidence of homeowners in order to enter the victims' homes.

Offenders are using false identities and stories, such as new neighbor, utility worker, village employee or construction worker. In addition to false identities, the thieves are making up stories in order to gain access to the house or property, such as installing a fence and need to check the property line; checking on the water meter or working on broken water main; cutting some trees or performing some service that may affect the property; or checking on work that was done for a neighbor.

The Homewood Police Department also reminds residents to always ask for identification from anyone that may want to enter your home.

Residents may also want to call the company or village that any such individual says they are working for to verify their employment. Residents may also call the Homewood Police Department at any time for assistance.
Homewood Village Board unanimously passes budget

Sales tax revenues projected at $4.1 million

By Peter J. Gallanis
SOUTH SUBURBAN NEWS SERVICE

The Homewood Village Board passed its 2012-13 budget by a unanimous vote at its April 10 village board meeting, and according to Village Manager Ralph DeWitt, the village is in good fiscal shape. Homewood runs on a fiscal year budget from May 1 through April 30.

DeWitt told TribLocal that sales tax revenues are projected to be $4.1 million in the 2012-13 fiscal year, a $150,000 increase from last year’s budget. The village expects real estate taxes to bring in $2.818 million, a $232,000 reduction compared to last year. “This is due to property assessments,” DeWitt said. “The bottom line is declining home values over the last four years.”

Looking at the village finances overall, DeWitt said, “Revenues have been relatively flat. We have a slight uptick in sales tax but that’s offset by a reduction in real estate taxes and state income taxes.” DeWitt added that according to numbers reviewed after the last census, the village hasn’t experienced the growth that other Illinois cities have.

Illinois state income tax revenues are expected to total $1.5 million, about $80,000 less than in last year’s budget. “Those are the biggies,” DeWitt said, referencing sales tax, revenues and real estate taxes.

Telecommunications tax revenues are projected to be $899,000, a $24,000 decrease from last year, due to the increasing trend of a number of residents dropping traditional land line services and switching to cellular.

On the debt side of the equation, DeWitt said, “We’re pretty much a low-debt community.” He said outside of pension issues, the village only has one major bond debt, a $2.2 million bond taken out in 2010. “We’re making payments on the bond so that’s really our only major debt.” Since the village has been faithfully paying on the bond, “We’re in a better debt position than last year,” he said.

While the village is in relatively good financial shape, that doesn’t mean there aren’t challenges. DeWitt said although revenues are up about 2 percent from last year, expenses have increased about 3 percent, leaving a 1 percent gap — or in dollars, about $200,000. “So our challenge will be to close that 1 percent,” DeWitt said.

Talks are continuing, but ideas such as canceling the village’s annual bike race have been floated.

Furthermore, if no solution can be found, the village does have a cash reserve fund, and DeWitt said the village can dip into those funds, if necessary, to close the budget gap.

On the business front, the village hasn’t lost any significant businesses from its tax rolls, but the village does house a Kmart, and DeWitt said the situation will be monitored closely as Kmart has closed several locations in recent years.

Sears Holdings Corp., owner of Kmart, laid off 100 employees from its Hoffman Estates headquarters Feb. 16.

Village of Flossmoor to solicit bids for lower electric rates

By Peter J. Gallanis
SOUTH SUBURBAN NEWS SERVICE

Flossmoor voters passed a referendum on the March 20 primary election ballot that allows the village to seek lower electric rates for its residents.

By law, the village must hold two public hearings to present its plan to residents and allow them the opportunity to comment. Called the Flossmoor Electric Aggregation Governance Plan, the first hearing was held April 16; the second hearing is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. May 7 at Village Hall.

Following the May 7 hearing, the village will solicit bids from suppliers who are licensed as alternative electric suppliers in Illinois. If favorable pricing does not exist, the village will not enter into an agreement and remain with its current energy supplier, ComEd. Kimberly Richardson said the earliest residents could see a reduction in their electric bills would be summer or fall of this year.

The state of Illinois amended deregulation legislation, allowing municipalities to aggregate their residential and small business accounts, and seek competitive bids for energy. Under state law, voters must approve a referendum granting Flossmoor the authority to seek electric service bids for residents and small businesses under a single contract.

Village officials added if the village decides to purchase electricity from another supplier, residents still have the option to opt out and continue to purchase their electricity from ComEd.

Dean Armstrong, owner of the Flossmoor Station Restaurant and Brewery and chairman of a grassroots organization called Flossmoor Residents for Lower Electric Rates said he was glad to see the referendum pass.

“Some of the other communities in Illinois voted [the referendum] down. Not only did we approve it, but by an 85 percent margin,” Armstrong said. “We had a very dedicated group of people who devoted their time and money to get this thing done. I wish to congratulate them on a job well done.

“The savings for the community as a whole could be between $600,000 to $700,000 a year,” Armstrong continued. “That’s buying power; those monies can in turn be reinvested in the community.”

Homewood Area Small Fry team places 7th

Homewood Area Small Fry Basketball finished seventh at the 44th annual International Tournament held earlier this month at ESPN Wide World of Sports at Walt Disney World Resort in Orlando, Fla. The Vikings posted a 2-3 mark at the tournament to finish the 2012 season with a 14-14 record.

Homewood opened the tournament April 9 with a 46-37 loss to Encantada, Puerto Rico, after leading by as many as 17 points in the second half. Ernst Coupet, Nick Perry and Keegan Mraz each scored seven points to lead the Vikings while Jesiah Jones pulled down six rebounds.

The Vikings rebounded the next day to earn their first victory at the international tournament with a 36-30 win over CIAPR.

Homewood Area closed the tournament on a positive note in the seventh-place game by defeating Harvey 59-28. The Vikings raced out to an 18-2 lead and cruised the rest of the way for the 31-point win. Nick Perry led all scorers with 18 points, including three 3-pointers, while Ernst Coupet added 17 points in the second half. Jesiah Jones nearly had a double-double with nine points and seven rebounds.

Baseball, softball to hold opening day celebrations

The opening day of baseball and softball season for the Flossmoor Baseball and Softball leagues will be celebrated by a parade at 9 a.m. April 28. Alec Anderson to replace retiring Joe Skowronski

Homewood-Flossmoor High School will welcome Alec Anderson as its new director of athletics and activities on July 1.

Anderson, who brings more than 15 years of experience in athletic administration, was sought by the school based on his track record. Anderson looks forward to directing the HFHS athletic program, which he says other local schools use as a model, and recognizes the school’s competitiveness and success in and out of its conference.

Working at HFHS will also mean a shorter commute for the family man, whose fifth-grade daughter, Sierra, enjoys attending sporting events with him.

Anderson’s love for athletics is evidenced in his main focus for directing the HFHS program: to work alongside coaches and help foster excellence.

“In my position, I like to help coaches and their programs be successful,” Anderson said. “I’ve been around 30-plus years. … I can give advice that can be beneficial. I relish in the role of helping young coaches develop and take their roles further.”

He is a certified athletic administrator, a member of the National Interscholastic Association of Athletic Administrators and serves as the state awards chairman for the Illinois Athletic Directors Association.

He holds a Bachelor of Science in history and physical education from Southern Illinois University — Carbondale, and a master’s degree in education, administration and supervision from Governors State University.

Outside the school walls, Anderson enjoys landscaping and gardening, which he calls “a pretty good stress reliever.”

He lives with his wife, Karen, a principal’s secretary at Kankakee Junior High School, and their daughter, who, naturally, enjoys playing sports. She currently plays basketball and participates in softball in the spring.

When asked what he is most excited to bring to HFHS, Anderson references his experience working at different area high schools with diverse racial and economic backgrounds, among them Urbana, Evanston and Bolingbrook, and that he works well with people from all different walks of life. Coaches, he said, can use his experience to grow and cultivate better relationships with students and parents.

Anderson also brings a team-player mentality to his new role. From a coaching standpoint, Anderson expects his coaches to adopt the philosophy that the team is more important than the individual. “We’ll be successful as Homewood-Flossmoor High School,” he said, “not just as an individual.”
